Wilson's Request Stops Widening President's Desire for Economy Induces Decision Against Madison Avenue Plan.

President Wilson's influence on things large and small, often termed by Congress as "executive power," hobbes up yesterday morning in Borough President Dowling's office on the twentieth floor of the Municipal Building in the matter of the widening of Madison avenue from Twenty-sixth street north to Sixteenth street.

It was evident that the Borough President's decision was not influenced by the hour and a half of argument for and against the widening of the building front of the famous old avenue that the President had placed on the spending money for unnecessary improvements.

Mayor Hylan and Comptroller Craig were in Washington recently and were urged to follow the strictest economy.

More than fifty persons, owners and representatives of owners holding property in the city of New York, attended the hearing on the widening of Madison avenue.

At the hearing, the city engineer, James H. McGowan, presented the plan for the widening of Madison avenue from Twenty-sixth street north to Sixteenth street.

The plan for the widening of Madison avenue from Twenty-sixth street north to Sixteenth street was presented to the Board of Estimate and the Board of Public Works.
